Function, role and competence of youth department

Over 1.4 million of Sweden's inhabitants are young people between the ages of 13 and 25. Young people's lives are affected by public decisions and measures in most policy areas of the Government and at all levels of society. Therefore, national youth policy concerns a number of different areas, such as work, housing, education, health, leisure and participation. The Ministry of Education, Research and Culture is responsible for the coordination of the Government's youth policy, issues affecting youth organisations and international cooperation in the youth field. The task of coordinating the national youth policy presupposes active intersectoral efforts within the Government Offices and vis à vis other authorities. It involves extensive contact with youth organisations, the Swedish Association of Local Authorities and Regions and a number of innovative youth projects. The central government authority, the National Board for Youth Affairs (Ungdomsstyrelsen), is an important actor in the implementation of youth policy. In Sweden the local authorities and county councils have a considerable degree of autonomy and many decisions that concern young persons are taken at municipal level.

Sweden has 290 Municipalities which all have a local government. The local authorities and the county councils/regions are responsible for providing a major part of all public services. They have considerable degree of autonomy and have independent powers of taxation. Local self-government and the right to levy taxes are stipulated in the Instrument of Government, one of the four pillars of the Swedish Constitution. The municipalities are responsible for: social services, schools, spatial planning and building, health and environmental protection, refuse collection and waste disposal, rescue services, water and sewerage, order and security. Voluntary activities are: recreation activities, culture, housing, energy, industrial facilities and employment. Because it is voluntary for the municipalities to engage in these fields due to their autonomy, they will do so in different ways and to a greater or less extent. Some have an elaborate overall youth policy while others have not. For further reading about the municipalities go to: www.skl.se. For access to the different municipalities' webpages use the following link.

based on The Children's helpline and the Bris-mail. From these contacts Bris collects statistics of troubled children and young people all over Sweden, which means that Bris's advisory role has a big impact. BRIS is a national association operating from five large cities. Save the Children, Sweden. www.rb.se. Save the Children, Sweden work for children's rights in Sweden and internationally. The organisation has a local office in every municipality in Sweden. By having a good knowledge of children's rights and conditions, they influence public opinion and exert an influence on those in power to see to the best interests of the child. The organisation are spreading their knowledge and experience to those who have influence over children's conditions. The Swedish Association of Local Authorities and Regions (SALAR). The Swedish Association of Local Authorities and the Federation of Swedish County Councils represent the governmental, professional and employerrelated interests of Sweden's 290 local authorities, 18 county councils and two regions. SALAR has the mandate of the municipalities to look after and pursue their interest. They play an important role as an advisory body in many fields as well as in the youth field.

3 Legislation

3.1 Constitution (articles that concern youth)

Like most other democracies, Sweden has a written Constitution which sets out the rules for political decision-making. Instead of one document, Sweden has four fundamental laws: the Instrument of Government, the Act of Succession, the Freedom of the Press Act and the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression. These laws serve as a basis for how Sweden is ruled. They also serve to protect the citizens' freedoms and rights. There are no articles or laws in the constitution that specifically concern youth, they concern every citizen. Source: www.riksdagen.se

3.2 Application and transposition of the United Nations Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms

The Swedish Constitution has four fundamental laws: the Instrument of Government, the Act of Succession, the Freedom of the Press Act and the Fundamental Law on Freedom of Expression. The Fundamental rights and Freedoms are chiefly protected in three of these four fundamental laws; The instrument of Government, The Freedom of the Press Act and the Freedom of Expression. The protection of the Fundamental rights and Freedoms is found principally in the two first chapters of the Government Act. The first chapter establish that the public/government power shall be exercised with respect for every person's equal worth and for the individual person's freedom and dignity. It is also stated that the state system shall especially secure the right to work, housing and education and also work for social care and security and for a good living environment. In the second chapter of the Government Act there are provisions on fundamental freedoms and rights for example the positive and negative freedoms of opinion and the physical integrity. In the same chapter it is stated that law or other regulations cannot have the effect that any citizen is unfairly treated because he/she with regards to race, colour of the skin or ethnic origin belongs to a minority. It is also stipulated that law or any other regulation cannot have the effect that any citizen is unfairly treated because of his/her gender. In the second chapter of the Government Act there are regulations for which freedoms and rights that can be restricted, in what form restrictions can be decided and what common principles that must be observed for a restriction to be allowed. In addition to the fundamental laws there are a number of Swedish laws and regulations on other levels that has practical signification for the individual person's freedoms and rights. For instant there are laws and regulations concerning healthcare, social services, correctional treatment, protection against different forms of discrimination.

3.3 Application and transposition of the European Convention on Childrens Rights

The Children's Ombudsman is a government agency which monitors the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, CRC in Sweden. For instance the Ombudsman submits bills for legislative changes to the Swedish Government and promotes the application of the CRC in the work of government agencies, municipalities and county councils.
